Q: MySQL, how can I use UPDATE statements into INSERT INTO SELECT statement? I would like to do something like that but don't know how: UPDATE table1 SET id = (SELECT MAX(id) FROM table2); In the same time, i need to use UPDATE...DELETE statement to avoid duplicate records. I would like to do this with all tables (table1 to table100) but only if table2.id is already empty. A: I don't understand why you'd want this. If you want to retrieve the latest id with this method, you can do something like that. SELECT MAX(id) FROM table1; But if you are trying to increase id in all tables then you should use ALTER TABLE. It's better. ALTER TABLE table1 CHANGE id id INTEGER; A: I'd use triggers (this includes mysql update, if you don't care about the type of update). The table is 1st added, and the trigger is put in at the end of the table like in your example. I think this is a very good way to handle this task. It is a very well known pattern. op { graph_op_name: "NonZeroInDim" visibility: HIDDEN in_arg { name: "x" description: Multimodality imaging of cryptogenic ischemic stroke: does multimodality imaging improve the diagnostic yield? Use of multiple pathogenicity tests to assess virulence potential of Aspergillus fumigatus isolates. In this study, we assessed the virulence potential of 2200 Aspergillus fumigatus isolates, divided in three groups, according to their expected species and colony morphology (aspergilliform, velutinous or flocculent) by using multiple pathogenicity tests. Culture filtrates, mycelia or conidia were used for phagocytosis and haemolysis assays, the growth of 5 isolates was studied in murine peritoneal macrophages and 3 isolates were tested for their ability to invade into HT29 cells. The most virulent isolates were able to induce a more severe damage in the infected rabbits and showed the highest capacity for growth in the phagocytic cells. These virulent isolates were the most filamentous conidia producer among the aspergilliform conidia-forming isolates. These results suggest that these mycelial properties are associated with the virulence potential of A. fumigatus isolates in a murine model of aspergillosis.
